

Frugal Living Tips for De-Germinating your Computer Keyboard

A little while back, we shared some practical tips for how to clean a computer keyboard. Today's tip is an extension of the earlier and will show you how to disinfect that which is undoubtedly germ-infested.

After you've followed our other tips for cleaning out your keyboard, simply dip a cotton swab into some hydrogen peroxide and run the swab over the keys and through all of the spaces between the keys.

Now, the next time you eat lunch while working away at your computer, you can do so with less worry as to the germs that are going into your mouth along with your sandwich.

This is just one more reason peroxide should be a staple in every frugal living enthusiast's home.

Okay, so you might not be able to clean your entire house in 20 seconds or less—if you can I want to know your secret—but these small household tasks can be completed in as much time and will help to significantly reduce how long you spend cleaning at any one time. Improving your efficiency at all household tasks, including cleaning, is crucial for successful frugal living.

Walking past the computer or TV? Quickly dust them off.

Been a little lax cleaning the kitchen? Take 20 seconds or so and wipe down the stove, fridge or microwave.

Empty the garbage cans in two of the rooms in your house.

Wipe down the baseboards in one room with a clean, damp cloth.

Noticed how dusty that air vent is? Take 20 and give it a good wipe down.

Really, with the right cleaning tools on hand, you can make a quick job of virtually anything. Tackle a couple of tasks at a time and come cleaning day you will have far less to do. Now that you know how to clean like a pro, get on to other, more enjoyable things. Click here for more information.

<http://thriftculturenow.com/>